

SOCIAL ACTION AND JUSTICE EDUCATION FELLOWSHIP

50%+

of Pennsylvania schools have no teachers of color, making recruitment a priority.

23%

of the School District of Philadelphia's workforce is Black—down from 34% in 2002.

$46K

starting salary for Philadelphia educators.

TEACH IN YOUR COMMUNITY

Have you had a teacher who inspired you to work harder and dream bigger? In school districts across the country, there is a demand for educators of color—including here in Philadelphia.

Enrolling in Arcadia's Social Action and Justice Education (SAJE) Fellowship is your next step if you're interested in:

- Embarking on a college experience that supports your needs and goals.
- Helping diverse students succeed in the classroom and beyond.
- Teaching your favorite subject at the high school level.

ARCADIA
UNIVERSITY

arcadia.edu/SAJE

SAJE FELLOWSHIPS

Within Arcadia's School of Education, SAJE fellows earn bachelor's degrees aligned with a Secondary Education minor track, leading to certification in Biology, Chemistry, English, General Science, Mathematics, or Social Studies. Field work, leadership experiences, and courses in inclusion and cultural competency are all part of the experience. Students will have opportunities to investigate and respond to authentic, complex situations in real-world settings.

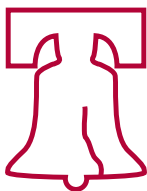

SAJE fellows are aspiring educators of color, interested in:

- Leading schools and communities.
- Developing global perspectives.
- Enacting change in the world.

Fellows benefit from:

- Tuition and housing scholarships, study abroad funding, and an included MacBook.
- Educational support from academic coaches, Arcadia's preparatory summer program, and partnerships in the Philadelphia School District.
- Cultural competency workshops and courses, diversity and social justice events, and inclusivity training.
- Leadership development and mentorship opportunities on campus and beyond.

After graduation, fellows:

- Secure job placements with Philadelphia School District partners.
- Teach in diverse communities.
- Advocate for social justice.
- Mentor the next generation of students.